Figuring out how to use the interface The Photoshop interface has two tabs at the top of the program's workspace. The leftmost tab contains many of the top panel controls and tools. The rightmost tab contains your open image and a number of other tools. The leftmost tab, also called the workspace, is where most of your work takes place in Photoshop. Before you begin to edit your images, click the image window's tab to switch to the image. If the image window is not open, select it in the Photoshop window and then click the tab to open it. In the Figure 5-1, for example, the image window is open. (See the next section for more information about the image window.) After you launch Photoshop and open the first image, you can use the panel's tools and controls (refer to Figure 5-1) to access your image and work with the image in the workspace. The many tools and panels in Photoshop are organized into groups, which in turn are labeled with letters from a to j and arranged along the left edge of the workspace. Each group contains a number of tools and panels that work in similar ways. FIGURE 5-1: To view the image, click its tab in the workspace. In addition to the workspace, the right side of Photoshop contains a number of panels, although the panel organization differs from the workspace. Unlike the workspace, the panels are usually visible only when you use them, and some panels, such as the Toolbox and Options windows, have multiple modes where you can access them in the same window. The following sections explain some important panels and explain how to navigate the interface to access them.

For the third year in a row, Canada has failed to even make the top 10 global list of the most attractive countries for investment from the world's most important source of foreign direct investment, PricewaterhouseCoopers (PwC). The average cost of property ownership is much higher in Canada than in countries such as Germany, the U.K., or Australia. According to a recent report from Finance Alberta, an annual list of the most and least expensive places to own property, the average price of a detached home in Canada is over $430,000, almost 30 per cent higher than the average price in Australia. The PwC World Investment Report features the results of a survey of more than 2,000 senior executives in 190 countries. The publication is based on the answers of more than 2,500 senior executives, the opinions of a global advisory board, and local research. In a press release, PwC Canada chairman and chief executive officer Prakash Venugopal was quoted saying, "What this report signals is that we have lost our competitive edge, especially in financial services." The report underscores the fact that Canada is not a desirable place to do business, according to Victoria-based PwC Canada financial services and real estate division leader Ian Dearholt. This loss of competitive edge occurs in the face of uncertainty about where the economy is going in the coming years, the report said. Among the findings of the report, if ranked in descending order, are: 1. Australia 2. Switzerland 3. Germany 4. Australia 5. United States 6. Canada 7. United Kingdom 8. Singapore 9. Ireland 10. China In the individual categories, the report also ranked Canada 27th in terms of "country attractiveness," the most attractive, Canada was ranked 26th for "return on assets," the least attractive, Canada scored 24th in terms of "income protection," the most attractive, and lastly Canada placed 34th in terms of "overseas market conditions." In its press release, PwC Canada identified the following key reasons for Canada's negative ranking: -Increasing taxes and unfavourable regulations -Decreasing demand -Unsustainable political instability -Economies in competitive pressure -
